

Miguel Angel Parada (maparada@ing.uchile.cl)

Miguel A. Parada (middle), A.N. Sial (right), A.J. Toselli (Topocalma, Chile, 2002).

Miguel Angel Parada is a professor in the University of Chile at Santiago (B.Sc. degree from the University of Chile, 1975 and Ph.D. degree from the Tohoku University, Japan, 1982). He is an igneous petrologist with an ample experience on igneous rocks from the Andes and metalogenetic implications, origin of zonation in magmatic chambers and emplacement and subsolidus cooling in plutons. He has visited the LABISE in two occasions (19915, 2009) under the framework of projects sponsored by CNPq, and developed joint research with the LABISE team in Brazil, Argentina, Chile.